

LEGO ROBOTICS DAY CAMP

Exhibition Checklist

- ❖ Display boards for each lab (StratoCore 20"x24" can be used as visual aids during the week, then covered with butcher paper and decorated by lab members on Days 4 & 5. Some things to include could be: camper names, robot names, PA name, favorite things done/learned.
- ❖ Speakers during (their) lunch hour: professional women engineers, software engineers, landscape architects, architects, lab technicians, industrial designers; college students in science/math/technology disciplines; the Program Aides (PAs) could also speak about their Lego Robotics team and tournament experience.
- ❖ Judge/referee. He/she may also need a clipboard, a timer, designated table resetter, timekeeper, and scorecard stickerer/duplicater so that each camper may take home a copy of their mission(s) scorecard. PAs and adult volunteers work well here. You will need lots of small stickers in a variety of types – smiley faces, hearts, etc.
- ❖ Chairs for adults with a good view of the mission tables; if possible, arrange a space off to the side, designated with a line of (blue) masking tape for parents, photographers and videographers to get a closer view.
- ❖ Certificates of participation/accomplishment for each camper, ideally with a photo of their lab team and robot (taken on Day 4). Certificates of accomplishment for each Program Aide and for those adult volunteers who made a substantial time commitment. If applicable, Girl Scout Robotics patches for campers and PA pins. Using sheet protectors to package certificates, scorecards, and miscellaneous works well. PAs are always thrilled to receive some small piece of swag in addition – homemade LEGO pins or bead danglies for name tag chains are great, and can differentiate those PAs doing more than one camp. Small boxes of chocolates also work well.
- ❖ Greeter – who also hands out and collects Parent Program evaluations and pencils.
- ❖ Refreshments - Girl Scout cookies, what else? – and a place to serve them, removed enough from the action so that campers can be kept from pigging out before the adult guests get a chance.
- ❖ CD or video of local FLL tournament action and a way to show it – TV/video, Computer/projector – is optional, but can help with crowd control while seating guests and serving refreshments.
